

Goal of Proof of Concept

We need to make certain the applicant is capable of three things:

- A) Building solid code that can be used by the in-house development team to build out the PHP files for the site
- B) Having an eye for detail and consistency in application of styling
- C) Possessing a good sense of how and when to use animations to improve the usability of the site. Animations and transitions should be consistent and smooth.

Examples for Inspiration:

Site Information

This site is the admin system that helps our team manage a wide variety of projects. The admin system already exists and is in use, this will be a re-skin and restructuring of the site to make it much easier to use.

There are a few basic concepts to understand that will make understanding the layout of the site easier. Each of the projects our team works on is called a Job. Think of the Job as a container that's used to control and display combined info about all the pieces inside it.

Each Job is made up of one or more Groups. The Group is the basic division of work that our team works on. Our team needs to be able to compare all Jobs at first, then be able to compare all Groups within a specific Job, then view the details of a specific Group.

The page will only be viewed on desktop or tablets, but the layout must take in account that we will want to build a mobile layout that displays a much reduced amount of data later.

The page goes from edge to edge in the browser window.

This is the Details page for the selected Job.

All of the groups shown in the flyout menu on page 6 are shown below. Each of the groups can also have the status Live, Paused and Closed. The information displayed in columns must always line up so the user can scan from top to bottom comparing the numbers in the Job to the numbers in each Group within it. It's also important that the icons always line up.
